Man in the Wild

Where does he go?

Bear Grylls is a man who likes adventure! In his television programme, Born Survivor, a helicopter drops him into areas which are miles away from other people. He has been to the rainforest in Brazil, to frozen mountains in the Andes and to the desert in Africa.

What does he do?

His adventures are more difficult than usual because he only has the clothes he is wearing. He must use only his own strength and skill to get out. He has to find food in the middle of the jungle, on top of a mountain or under the ice.

What is difficult?

Bear says that the temperature can be a problem as he goes to places that are much hotter or much colder than anywhere else on Earth. In Siberia he had to swim under the ice of a frozen lake. He was standing with no clothes on, waiting to jump into a hole and his feet actually froze to the ice! Bear says extreme cold is worse than extreme heat, but he thinks it is less dangerous in cold places. He says, "Crocodiles and snakes don't live in cold places!"

Why does he do it?

He likes adventure and he thinks living in these places is easier than doing an office job. "It's not as boring as home because I never know how the day will end!" he says.
